

2024

TRIAL HIGHER SCHOOL CERTIFICATE EXAMINATION

DO NOT REMOVE PAPER FROM EXAMINATION ROOM

--	--	--	--	--

Centre Number

--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--

Student Number

English Advanced

Paper 1 – Texts and Human Experiences

Morning Session
Monday, 5 August 2024

General Instructions

- Reading time – 10 minutes
- Working time – 1 hour and 30 minutes
- Write using black pen
- A Stimulus Booklet is provided with this examination
- Write your Centre Number and Student Number on the top of this page

Total marks: 40

Section I – 20 marks (page 2)

- Attempt Questions 1–5
- Allow about 45 minutes for this section

Section II – 20 marks (page 3)

- Attempt Question 6
- Allow about 45 minutes for this section

Disclaimer

These 'Trial' Higher School Certificate Examinations have been prepared by CSSA, a division of Catholic Schools NSW Limited. Every effort has been made to prepare these 'Trial' Higher School Certificate Examinations in accordance with the NSW Education Standards Authority (NESA) documents, Principles for Setting HSC Examinations in a Standards Referenced Framework and Principles for Developing Marking Guidelines Examinations in a Standards Referenced Framework. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied that the 'Trial' HSC Examination papers mirror in every respect the actual HSC Examination papers in any or all courses to be examined. These papers do not constitute 'advice' nor can they be construed as authoritative interpretations of NESA intentions. Catholic Schools NSW Limited accepts no liability for any reliance, use or purpose related to these 'Trial' HSC Examination papers. Advice on HSC examination issues is only to be obtained from the NESA.

Section I

20 marks

Attempt Questions 1–5

Allow about 45 minutes for this section

Answer Section 1 in a SEPARATE writing booklet. EXTRA writing booklets are available.

In your answers you will be assessed on how well you:

- demonstrate understanding of human experiences in texts
 - analyse, explain and assess the ways human experiences are represented in texts
-

Read Texts 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 in the Stimulus Booklet carefully and then answer the questions.

Question 1 (4 marks)

Text 1 – Nonfiction extract

Explain what Richard Flanagan comes to realise about life by reflecting on his earlier experiences in Text 1.

Question 2 (4 marks)

Text 2 – Poem

In what ways does the persona convey the value of individuality in Text 2?

Question 3 (5 marks)

Text 3 – Fiction extract

How does Jennifer Egan use humour to portray insights into human experience in Text 3?

Question 4 (4 marks)

Text 4 – Memoir extract

Analyse how Text 4 provides insight into the shifting nature of assumptions.

Question 5 (3 marks)

Text 5 – Poem

How does the speaker communicate the power of the ordinary in Text 5?

Section II

20 marks

Attempt Question 6

Allow about 45 minutes for this section

Answer the question in a SEPARATE writing booklet. EXTRA writing booklets are available.

Your answer will be assessed on how well you:

- demonstrate understanding of human experiences in texts
 - analyse, explain and assess the ways human experiences are represented in texts
 - organise, develop and express ideas using language appropriate to audience, purpose and context
-

Question 6 (20 marks)

Individuality and identity are as much about what separates as what unites.

To what extent does your prescribed text reflect the ideas in the above statement?

The prescribed texts are listed on pages 10 and 11 of the Stimulus Booklet.

End of Examination

English Advanced

Paper 1 – Texts and Human Experiences

Stimulus Booklet for Section I and List of prescribed texts for Section II

	Pages
Section I
• Text 1 – Nonfiction extract	2
• Text 2 – Poem	3
• Text 3 – Fiction extract	4–5
• Text 4 – Memoir extract	6–7
• Text 5 – Poem	8
Section II
• List of prescribed texts	10–11

Copyright Notice

1. The copyright in this examination paper is that of Catholic Schools NSW Limited ACN 619 593 369 trading as CSSA - © 2024 Catholic Schools NSW.
2. This examination paper may only be used in accordance with the CSSA Trial HSC Examination Terms & Conditions (Terms). Those Terms should be read in full. The Terms contain a number of conditions including those relating to:
 - a. how this examination paper may be used for trial HSC examinations and or as a practice paper;
 - b. when copies may be made of this examination paper;
 - c. the security and storage requirements for this examination paper; and
 - d. guidelines for the conduct of trial HSC examinations.
3. Some of the material in this examination paper may have been copied and communicated to you in accordance with the statutory licence in section 113P of the Copyright Act 1968 (Cth) (Act). Any further reproduction or communication of this material by you may be the subject of copyright protection under the Act.
4. Do not remove this notice.

Section I

Text 1 – Nonfiction extract

Question 7

When I first attempted writing novels as an adult I wrote tales of cities and crowds, the great tropes¹ of European modernism². Every word was rubbish. I'd never seen a city or known a crowd. My first experience of a crowd was in London at the age of twenty-four. I was frightened. It was inconceivable that there could be so many people and not one person knew you nor you them. And there amidst innumerable millions of fellow human beings I felt the most terrible solitude that was also an inconsolable fear. There was no anchor, there were no roots, there was no river down which I might return. All I knew was what I first experienced as a child, unsayable and unwritten, a world within which the measure of things was not man made and of which you existed as a minuscule fragment. Finding words for it was, in one sense, my life's work and my life's failure.

Now that world we oddly disdain as the non-human – as though we are somehow separate of it – is vanishing. And with it, unnoticed, a different, larger way of being human than that propounded by western art and thought. Could it be what is being lost with that world is us?

At some point I came to understand that I wrote from the frontlines of a war about which most have no idea. For a long time I could not understand that it was possible to be both on the side that has the power, that has unleashed the destruction, vast as it is indescribable, and, at the same time, be on the side that loses everything.

To do that you have to return to a child blinking in the rain, staring into the darkness, looking for something that his parents saw only an instant before and which has already vanished for all time, never to return.

That's life.

RICHARD FLANAGAN

Question 7, 2023

Penguin Random House Australia

Reproduced with permission

¹ A trope a genre archetype or cliché

² Modernism refers to a wide range of experimental trends in European literature at the end of the 19th and the beginning of the 20th century

Text 2 – Poem

Possibilities

I prefer movies.
I prefer cats.
I prefer the oaks along the Warta¹.
I prefer Dickens to Dostoyevsky.
I prefer myself liking people
to myself loving mankind.
I prefer keeping a needle and thread on hand, just in case.
I prefer the color green.
I prefer not to maintain that reason is to blame for everything.
I prefer exceptions.
I prefer to leave early.
I prefer talking to doctors about something else.
I prefer the old fine-lined illustrations.
I prefer the absurdity of writing poems
to the absurdity of not writing poems.
I prefer, where love's concerned, nonspecific anniversaries that can be celebrated every day.
I prefer moralists who promise me nothing.
I prefer cunning kindness to the over-trustful kind.
I prefer the earth in civvies.
I prefer conquered to conquering countries.
I prefer having some reservations.
I prefer the hell of chaos to the hell of order.
I prefer Grimms' fairy tales to the newspapers' front pages.
I prefer leaves without flowers to flowers without leaves.
I prefer dogs with uncropped tails.
I prefer light eyes, since mine are dark.
I prefer desk drawers.
I prefer many things that I haven't mentioned here
to many things I've also left unsaid.
I prefer zeroes on the loose
to those lined up behind a cipher.
I prefer the time of insects to the time of stars.
I prefer to knock on wood.
I prefer not to ask how much longer and when.
I prefer keeping in mind even the possibility that existence has its own reason for being.

WISLAWA SZYMBORSKA

The Wislawa Szymborska Foundation

<https://www.szymborska.org.pl/en/wislawa/selected-poems/possibilities/>

(translated by Stanislaw Baranczak and Clare Cavanagh)

Reproduced with permission

¹ Warta river in Poland

Text 3 – Fiction extract

The Candy House

Nobody including Alfred Hollander himself is certain of when he first began reacting violently-“allergically” – is the word he uses – to the artifice of TV. It started with the news: those fake smiles. That hair! Were they robots? Were they bobbleheads? Were they animate dolls he’d seen in horror-movie posters? It became impossible to watch the news with Alfred. It became hard to watch Cheers with Alfred. It became preferable not to watch anything with Alfred, who was apt to holler from the couch, still with a slight lisp: “How much are they paying her?” or “Who does he think he’s kidding!” It broke the mood.

Turning off the TV wasn’t enough; by age nine, Alfred’s intolerance of fakery had jumped the life/art barrier and entered his everyday world. He’d looked behind the curtain and seen the ways people played themselves, or – more insidiously – versions of themselves they’d cribbed from TV: Harried¹ Mom. Sheepish Dad. Stern Teacher. Encouraging Coach. Alfred would not—could not—tolerate these appropriations. “Stop pretending, and I’ll answer you,” he would inform his startled interlocutor², or, more bluntly, “That’s phony.” His family cat and dog, Vincent and Theo, went through their days without pretense. So did the squirrels and deer and gophers and fish that populated the lake-abundant region of Upstate New York where Alfred grew up and where his father, Ted Hollander, taught art history at a local college. Why did people have to pretend to be what they already were?

There was an obvious problem: Alfred was difficult –or “a nightmare,” to quote several witnesses. And there was a deeper problem: He poisoned his world. Many of us, wrongly accused of, say, spying for the Department of Homeland Security, or stalking a famous person whom we haven’t actually identified, will respond with guilt, anxiety, and attempts to telegraph our innocence. We behave, in other words, exactly as a surveilling Homeland Security agent, or surreptitious stalker, would behave. Likewise, adults charged by Alfred to “stop using that fake voice” would strive to act more natural and wind up acting less so: Parents played parents; teachers played teachers; baseball coaches played baseball coaches. And they got away as quickly as they could.

Family life was the epicentre of Alfred’s discontent. At dinner he felt “asphyxiated” by the quiet supremacy of Miles, his oldest brother, who was organized and accomplished, and by the studied vacancy of Ames, the middle brother, who came and went invisibly and whose real thoughts were always out of reach. In reply to his parents’ innocuous questions about his day at school, Alfred would often bark, “I can’t have this conversation,” upsetting his mother, Susan, who treasured family time.

At eleven, Alfred began wearing a brown paper bag with eyeholes over his head during holidays with his extended family. He kept the bag on throughout the meal, tweezing forkfuls of turkey or pecan pie through a rectangular mouth slot. His goal was to create a disruption so extreme that it jolted genuine responses—albeit negative—from those around him.

Text 3 continues on page 5

Text 3 (continued)

“What is Alfred doing?” a grandparent would ask.

“I’m wearing a bag over my head,” Alfred would reply from inside the bag.

“Is he unhappy with his appearance?”

“I’m right here, Grandma, you can ask me.”

“But I can’t see him”

JENNIFER EGAN
The Candy House, 2022
Scribner New York
Reproduced with permission

-
- ¹ harried feeling strained as a result of having constant demands made on one; harassed
² interlocutor a person who takes part in a dialogue or conversation

Text 4 – Memoir extract

Educated

I wanted the mind of a scholar, but it seemed that Dr. Kerry saw in me the mind of a roofer¹. The other students belonged in a library; I belonged in a crane.

The first week passed in a blur of lectures. In the second week, every student was assigned a supervisor to guide their research. My supervisor, I learned, was the eminent Professor Jonathan Steinberg, a former vice-master of a Cambridge college, who was much celebrated for his writings on the Holocaust.

My first meeting with Professor Steinberg took place a few days later. I waited at the porter's lodge until a thin man appeared and, producing a set of heavy keys, unlocked a wooden door set into the stone. I followed him up a spiral staircase and into the clock tower itself, where there was a well-lit room with simple furnishings: two chairs and a wooden table.

I could hear the blood pounding behind my ears as I sat down. Professor Steinberg was in his seventies but I would not have described him as an old man. He was lithe, and his eyes moved about the room with probing energy. His speech was measured and fluid.

"Tell me about your education. Where did you attend school?"

The air was immediately sucked from the room.

"I grew up in Idaho," I said.

"And you attended school there?"

It occurs to me in retrospect that someone might have told Professor Steinberg about me, perhaps Dr. Kerry. Or perhaps he perceived that I was avoiding his question, and that made him curious. Whatever the reason, he wasn't satisfied until I had admitted that I'd never been to school.

"How marvelous," he said, smiling. "It's as if I've stepped into Shaw's Pygmalion."

For two months I had weekly meetings with Professor Steinberg. I was never assigned readings. We read only what I asked to read, whether it was a book or a page.

From my father I had learned that books were to be either adored or exiled. Books that were of God – books written by the Mormon prophets or the Founding Fathers – were not to be studied so much as cherished, like a thing perfect in itself. I had been taught to read the words of men like Madison as a cast into which I ought to pour the plaster of my own mind, to be reshaped according to the contours of their faultless model. I read them to learn what to think, not how to think for myself. Books that were not of God were banished; they were a danger, powerful and irresistible in their cunning.

To write my essay I had to read books differently, without giving myself over to either fear or adoration. Because Burke had defended the British monarchy, Dad would have said he was an agent of tyranny. He wouldn't have wanted the book in the house. There was a thrill in trusting myself to read the words. There were wonderful suppositions embedded in this method of reading: that books are not tricks, and that I was not feeble.

Text 4 continues on page 7

Text 4 (continued)

I finished the essay and sent it to Professor Steinberg. Two days later, when I arrived for our next meeting, he was subdued. He peered at me from across the table. I waited for him to say the essay was a disaster, the product of an ignorant mind, that it had overreached, drawn too many conclusions from too little material.

"I have been teaching in Cambridge for thirty years," he said. "And this is one of the best essays I've read."

I was prepared for insults but not for this.

Professor Steinberg must have said more about the essay but I heard nothing. My mind was consumed with a wrenching need to get out of that room. In that moment I was no longer in a clock tower in Cambridge. I was seventeen, in a red jeep, and a boy I loved had just touched my hand. I bolted. I could tolerate any form of cruelty better than kindness. Praise was a poison to me; I choked on it. I wanted the professor to shout at me, wanted it so deeply I felt dizzy from the deprivation. The ugliness of me had to be given expression. If it was not expressed in his voice, I would need to express it in mine.

At my next supervision, Professor Steinberg said that when I applied for graduate school, he would make sure I was accepted to whatever institution I chose. "Have you visited Harvard?" he said. "Or perhaps you prefer Cambridge?"

I imagined myself in Cambridge, a graduate student wearing a long black robe that swished as I strode through ancient corridors.

"I can't go," I said. "I can't pay the fees."

"Let me worry about the fees," Professor Steinberg said.

TARA WESTOVER
Educated, 2018
Random House New York
Reproduced with permission

¹ roofer

a person who constructs or repairs roofs or (if used as slang), someone who is not well educated or is considered unable to be educated

Text 5 – Poem

Ordinary Life

Our life is ordinary,
I read in a crumpled paper
abandoned on a bench.
Our life is ordinary,
the philosophers told me.
Ordinary life, ordinary days and cares,
a concert, a conversation,
strolls on the town's outskirts,
good news, bad—
but objects and thoughts
were unfinished somehow,
rough drafts.
Houses and trees
desired something more
and in summer green meadows covered the volcanic planet
like an overcoat tossed upon the ocean.
Black cinemas crave light.
Forests breathe feverishly,
clouds sing softly,
a golden oriole¹ prays for rain.
Ordinary life desires.

ADAM ZAGAJEWSKI

Ordinary Life

The New Yorker, November 26, 2007

(translated by Clare Cavanagh)

Reproduced with permission

¹ Oriole

a kind of bird

English Advanced

Paper 1 – Texts and Human Experiences

Section I

20 marks

Question 1 – Text 1 – Nonfiction extract (4 marks)

Outcomes Assessed: EA12-1, EA12-3, EA12-5

Targeted Performance Bands: 2–6

Criteria	Marks
• Explains skilfully what Flanagan comes to realise about life by reflecting on his earlier experiences, using well-chosen supporting evidence	4
• Explains effectively what Flanagan comes to realise about life by reflecting on his earlier experiences, using appropriate supporting evidence	3
• Explains what Flanagan comes to realise about life by reflecting on his earlier experiences, with some supporting evidence	2
• Provides some relevant information about what Flanagan comes to realise about life	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

- He comes to learn that there is a difference between the generalisations and specific experiences: “When I first attempted writing novels as an adult I wrote tales of cities and crowds, the great tropes of European modernism. Every word was rubbish. I’d never seen a city or known a crowd”. It is difficult to write about what we do not know. Flanagan comes to realise that lived experiences create authenticity in character and writing.
- Individual experience is highly emotional and changes your expectations and behaviour, “My first experience of a crowd was in London at the age of twenty-four. I was frightened”, “and there amidst innumerable millions of fellow human beings I felt the most terrible solitude that was also an inconsolable fear”.
- Human experience can only be represented metaphorically, rather than directly: “There was no anchor, there were no roots, there was no river down which I might return. All I knew was what I first experienced as a child, unsayable and unwritten...Finding words for it was, in one sense, my life’s work and my life’s failure.”

Disclaimer

The information contained in this document is intended for the professional assistance of only teaching staff. It does not constitute advice to students. Further it is not the intention of CSSA to provide specific marking outcomes for all possible CSSA Trial HSC Examination answers. Rather the purpose is to provide teachers with information so that they can better explore, understand and apply HSC marking requirements, as established by the NSW Education Standards Authority. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied with respect to the application or use of CSSA Trial HSC Examination Marking Guidelines in relation to any specific ‘Trial’ HSC Examination question or answer. The CSSA assumes no liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of any Marking Guidelines provided for the CSSA Trial HSC Examination papers.

- He comes to realise the paradox of individual experience being significant to the individual, but insignificant to the entire human collective: “a world within which the measure of things was not man made and of which you existed as a miniscule fragment.”
- Flanagan comes to realise the complexity of life: “For a long time I could not understand that it was possible to be both on the side that has the power...and, at the same time, be on the side that loses everything.”
- Flanagan comes to realise the struggle that is tied into the collective human experience, “At some point I came to understand that I wrote from the frontlines of a war about which most have no idea”.
- Life is the struggle to understand and conceptualise the vast and difficult experiences around us which is represented through the metaphor of the child, “To do that you have to return to a child blinking in the rain...looking for something that his parents saw only an instant before and which has already vanished for all time, never to return”.

Disclaimer

The information contained in this document is intended for the professional assistance of only teaching staff. It does not constitute advice to students. Further it is not the intention of CSSA to provide specific marking outcomes for all possible CSSA Trial HSC Examination answers. Rather the purpose is to provide teachers with information so that they can better explore, understand and apply HSC marking requirements, as established by the NSW Education Standards Authority. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied with respect to the application or use of CSSA Trial HSC Examination Marking Guidelines in relation to any specific ‘Trial’ HSC Examination question or answer. The CSSA assumes no liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of any Marking Guidelines provided for the CSSA Trial HSC Examination papers.

Question 2 – Text 2 – Poem (4 marks)
Outcomes Assessed: EA12-1, EA12-3, EA12-5
Targeted Performance Bands: 2–6

value of individuality

Criteria	Marks
• Explains skilfully how the persona conveys the value of individuality, using well selected textual references	4
• Explains effectively how the persona conveys the value of individuality, using appropriate textual references	3
• Explains the value of individuality, with some reference to the text	2
• Provides some relevant information in response to the question	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

- The poet uses anaphora or repetition “I prefer” to shed light on the persona’s preferences that provide delight - highlighting the value of freedom or choice in developing individuality, “I prefer movies. / I prefer cats. / I prefer the oaks along the Warta.”
- The poem employs antithesis to contrast the scale of the persona’s preference: the simple preferences are contrasted to wider political preferences, “I prefer the color green” to “I prefer moralists / who promise me nothing” to create tension or highlight the diversity of individual preferences or highlight the significance of choice.
- The poet employs paradox to subvert the notion that our preference/s can be assumed: “I prefer the out-of-date to the mass-produced”. The preference for “the out-of-date to the mass-produced” serves as a metaphor for valuing uniqueness and tradition over the standardised and impersonal.
- The poet uses the oxymoron, “I prefer cunning kindness to the over-trustful kind” to suggest that the reader cannot make assumptions about preferences, rather they are based on our own personalities/experiences.
- The poem is written in free verse, lacking strict rhyme or meter to allow Szymborska to enhance the open-ended nature of individual possibilities, “I prefer myself liking people / to myself loving mankind”. The free verse poem and enjambment provides flexibility to explore different possibilities without being confined by a rigid structure, enhancing the significance of ‘possibilities’ in developing personal agency.

Disclaimer

The information contained in this document is intended for the professional assistance of only teaching staff. It does not constitute advice to students. Further it is not the intention of CSSA to provide specific marking outcomes for all possible CSSA Trial HSC Examination answers. Rather the purpose is to provide teachers with information so that they can better explore, understand and apply HSC marking requirements, as established by the NSW Education Standards Authority. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied with respect to the application or use of CSSA Trial HSC Examination Marking Guidelines in relation to any specific ‘Trial’ HSC Examination question or answer. The CSSA assumes no liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of any Marking Guidelines provided for the CSSA Trial HSC Examination papers.

How does Egan use humour to portray insights into human experience in Text 3?

Question 3 – Text 3 – Fiction extract (5 marks)

Outcomes Assessed: EA12-1, EA12-3, EA12-5 EA12-7

Targeted Performance Bands: 2–6

Criteria	Marks
Analyses comprehensively how Egan uses humour to portray insights into the human experience, using detailed, well-chosen textual evidence to support ideas	5
Analyses skilfully how Egan uses humour to portray insights into the human experience, using well-chosen textual evidence to support ideas	4
Explains effectively how Egan uses humour to portray insights into the human experience, using appropriate textual evidence to support ideas	3
Explains how Egan uses humour to portray insights into the human experience using some supporting evidence	2
Provides some relevant information about the human experience or how Egan uses humour	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

- The humorous anecdote of Alfred eating dinner through a paper bag provides insight into interesting family personalities: “He kept the bag on throughout the meal, tweezing forkfuls of turkey or pecan pie through a rectangular mouth slot”. The verb ‘tweezing’ creates humorous visual imagery of Alfred struggling against the practicality of eating with a paper bag.
- Humour contained in the use of the euphemism “allergically”, in the sentence “nobody including Alfred Hollander himself is certain of when he first began reacting violently – “allergically”—is the word he uses – to the artifice of TV” conveys insight into the young Alfred’s antipathy to the fakery of contemporary television: “it started with the news: those fake smiles. That hair! Were they bobbleheads? Were they animated dolls he’d seen in horror-movie posters? It became impossible to watch the news with Alfred.” It is amusing for the reader to consider Alfred as “allergic” to the artifice of a modern medium of communication.
- Within Alfred’s “allergic” reaction is a hidden social criticism of contemporary media and the obsession with appearance and disappearance of the real.
- Further euphemism is used humorously by Alfred’s brother to describe Alfred adjectivally as “difficult”, then more exaggeratedly as “a nightmare”, and the metaphor, “he poisoned his world” compounding the impact that Alfred’s anti-social behaviour is having on the family.
- Humour is embodied in the sentence “... by age nine, Alfred’s intolerance of fakery had jumped the life/art barrier and entered his everyday world.” As he starts to relate to his horror of role-playing and “fakery” Alfred projects roles he “sees” people themselves playing in the real world: “Harried Mom”, Sheepish Dad. Stern Teacher. Encouraging Coach.”
- Ironically Alfred’s intolerance of such role-playing, or artifice, moves him to assume a role of hidden identity: “At eleven, Alfred was wearing a brown paper bag with eyeholes over his head during holidays with his extended family.” The understatement of Alfred’s assumption of such an identity in an act of rebellion against the fakery he sees in all around him is funny especially given the ensuing dialogue with his grandparents.

Disclaimer

The information contained in this document is intended for the professional assistance of only teaching staff. It does not constitute advice to students. Further it is not the intention of CSSA to provide specific marking outcomes for all possible CSSA Trial HSC Examination answers. Rather the purpose is to provide teachers with information so that they can better explore, understand and apply HSC marking requirements, as established by the NSW Education Standards Authority. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied with respect to the application or use of CSSA Trial HSC Examination Marking Guidelines in relation to any specific ‘Trial’ HSC Examination question or answer. The CSSA assumes no liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of any Marking Guidelines provided for the CSSA Trial HSC Examination papers.

- Humour in the irony of his criticism of the adults around him playing exaggerated versions of themselves causing them to “strive to act more natural and wind up acting less so”
- The humour is conveyed in the satirical representation of the modern world with its reliance on technology and images, artifice and lack of authenticity, seen through the eyes of an impressionable/sensitive/sentient child who himself adopts an alternative version of himself.
- Humour evident in the satire with its use of exaggeration (“At dinner he felt ‘asphyxiated’”) understatement, irony and stereotyping as well as Alfred’s histrionic representation of himself and his grievances by wearing a brown paper bag over his head.

Disclaimer

The information contained in this document is intended for the professional assistance of only teaching staff. It does not constitute advice to students. Further it is not the intention of CSSA to provide specific marking outcomes for all possible CSSA Trial HSC Examination answers. Rather the purpose is to provide teachers with information so that they can better explore, understand and apply HSC marking requirements, as established by the NSW Education Standards Authority. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied with respect to the application or use of CSSA Trial HSC Examination Marking Guidelines in relation to any specific ‘Trial’ HSC Examination question or answer. The CSSA assumes no liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of any Marking Guidelines provided for the CSSA Trial HSC Examination papers.

Analyse how Text 4 provides insight into the shifting nature of assumptions.

Question 4 – Text 4 – Memoir extract (4 marks)

Outcomes Assessed: EA12-1, EA12-3, EA12-5

Targeted Performance Bands: 2–6

Criteria	Marks
• Analyses skilfully how the text provides insight into the shifting nature of assumptions, using well selected textual references	4
• Explains effectively how the text provides insight into the shifting nature of assumptions, using textual references	3
• Describes some assumptions, making some reference to the text	2
• Provides some relevant information	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

Assumptions:

- Narrator assumes that she can get into university because she would love to go, even though she has not attended much school.
- She assumes that Dr Kerry has assumed she is “a roofer”: someone incapable of higher education, or belongs in a trade, “I belonged in a crane.” She must shift her assumption when she finds her supervisor was to be the eminent, Jonathan Steinberg, a writer celebrated for his writings.

Insight: we cannot assume what others are thinking of us or judging us on

- Narrator assumes Professor Steinberg is very old as he is in his seventies, but he is “lithe”, climbs a spiral staircase with ease and “his eyes moved about the room with probing energy.”
- Narrator perceives, or assumes, he knows she is avoiding his question about her schooling, “Where did you attend school?” She is right as she has not been to school, but he has not assumed she is incapable as he says, after marking her essay, “I’ve been teaching at Cambridge for thirty years. And this is one of the best essays I’ve read.”

Insight: we cannot judge others on assumptions of age/education or lack of it. People’s actions, words and behaviours can, and do, shift our assumptions.

- we cannot assume that we are right about ourselves or even about our self-criticism; others often see us differently.
- Narrator assumes when she goes to Professor Steinberg to collect her essay that he will say “the essay was a disaster, the product of an ignorant mind, / that it had overreached, drawn too many conclusions from too little material”, but he does not – “one of the best essays [he has] read.”

Narrator has assumed she would be met by unkindness but instead she receives praise. “I could tolerate any form of cruelty better than kindness. Praise was a poison to me; I choked on it.”

Insight: we cannot assume that we are right about ourselves or our self-criticism; often others see us differently/or we prove ourselves wrong

Disclaimer

The information contained in this document is intended for the professional assistance of only teaching staff. It does not constitute advice to students. Further it is not the intention of CSSA to provide specific marking outcomes for all possible CSSA Trial HSC Examination answers. Rather the purpose is to provide teachers with information so that they can better explore, understand and apply HSC marking requirements, as established by the NSW Education Standards Authority. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied with respect to the application or use of CSSA Trial HSC Examination Marking Guidelines in relation to any specific ‘Trial’ HSC Examination question or answer. The CSSA assumes no liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of any Marking Guidelines provided for the CSSA Trial HSC Examination papers.

The Professor asks her whether she has visited Harvard or “Whether [she prefers] Cambridge.” She assumes that both are completely out of her reach: “I can’t go ... I can’t pay the fees.” Her assumption shifts when Professor Steinberg says, “Let me worry about the fees.”

Insight: we cannot assume that we are right about ourselves or our self-criticism; often others see us differently/or we prove ourselves wrong; we cannot assume that the world will treat us unkindly – the kindness of strangers very often disabuses us of our notions or corrects our notions.

Question 5 – Text 5 – Poem (3 marks)

Outcomes Assessed: EA12-1, EA 12-3, EA12-5

Targeted Performance Bands: 2–6

Criteria	Marks
• Explains effectively ways the speaker communicates the power of the ordinary provides well-chosen, relevant textual evidence	3
• Explains how the speaker communicates the power of the ordinary; provides some textual evidence	2
• Describes aspects of the poem relating to the power of the ordinary	1

Answers could include reference to the following:

- There is power in the ordinary in the form of “a crumpled paper/abandoned on a bench” found by the persona, in that it leads the persona to a complex reflection on the nature of “ordinary”; leads the persona to muse on the philosophers on the concept that “our life is ordinary”
- Repetition of the adjective, “ordinary”, throughout the poem compounds the ordinariness of daily life with its routines and pursuits: “ordinary days and cares”, “a concert, a conversation, strolls” ... “good news, bad-”
- The mood of pensive musing changes with the disjunctive “but” at the beginning of line 10, where the speaker reflects on the unfinished nature of “objects and thoughts” referred to metaphorically as “rough drafts” indicating the unfinished nature of life and suggesting thereby, hope for beautification, transformation of the ordinary- something more...
- The hope for beautification, and transformation of the ordinary always arrives- “something more” is realised in a series of beautiful and resonant images: “in summer green meadows/ covered the volcanic planet/ like an overcoat tossed upon the ocean.” The unexpected simile conveys a sense of casual and unexpected comfort; the melodic image in the personification of “Clouds sing softly” and the personification of “Black cinemas crave light” indicate the deep, intrinsic nature of the “ordinary life desires” of something more, which, in the cycle of life always arrives, in its own time and surprises or delights us.

Disclaimer

The information contained in this document is intended for the professional assistance of only teaching staff. It does not constitute advice to students. Further it is not the intention of CSSA to provide specific marking outcomes for all possible CSSA Trial HSC Examination answers. Rather the purpose is to provide teachers with information so that they can better explore, understand and apply HSC marking requirements, as established by the NSW Education Standards Authority. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied with respect to the application or use of CSSA Trial HSC Examination Marking Guidelines in relation to any specific ‘Trial’ HSC Examination question or answer. The CSSA assumes no liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of any Marking Guidelines provided for the CSSA Trial HSC Examination papers.

Section II

20 marks

Question 6 (20 marks)

Outcomes Assessed: EA12-1, EA12-3, EA12-5, EA12-7

Targeted Performance Bands: 2–6

Criteria	Marks
- Evaluates skilfully the extent to which the prescribed text reveals that individuality and identity are as much about what separates as what unites - Presents an insightful response with detailed analysis supported by well-chosen textual references from the prescribed text - Writes a coherent and sustained response using language appropriate to audience, purpose and context	17–20
- Evaluates effectively the extent to which the prescribed text reveals that individuality and identity are as much about what separates as what unites - Presents a thoughtful response with analysis supported by well-chosen textual references from the prescribed text - Writes an organised response using language appropriate to audience, purpose and context	13–16
- Explains the extent to which the prescribed text reveals that individuality and identity are as much about what separates as what unites - Presents a response with some analysis using textual reference from the prescribed text - Writes an adequate response using language appropriate to audience, purpose and context	9–12
- Expresses limited understanding of the way/s that individuality and identity are as much about what separates as what unites. - Describes aspects of the prescribed text - Writes a limited response	5–8
- Refers to the prescribed text in an elementary way - Attempts to compose a response	1–4

Copyright Notice

- The copyright in this examination paper is that of Catholic Schools NSW Limited ACN 619 593 369 trading as CSSA - © 2024 Catholic Schools NSW4
- This examination paper may only be used in accordance with the CSSA Trial HSC Examination Terms & Conditions (Terms). Those Terms should be read in full. The Terms contain a number of conditions including those relating to:
 - how this examination paper may be used for trial HSC examinations and or as a practice paper;
 - when copies may be made of this examination paper;
 - the security and storage requirements for this examination paper; and
 - guidelines for the conduct of trial HSC examinations.
- Some of the material in this examination paper may have been copied and communicated to you in accordance with the statutory licence in section 113P of the Copyright Act 1968 (Cth) (Act). Any further reproduction or communication of this material by you may be the subject of copyright protection under the Act.
- Do not remove this notice.

Disclaimer

The information contained in this document is intended for the professional assistance of only teaching staff. It does not constitute advice to students. Further it is not the intention of CSSA to provide specific marking outcomes for all possible CSSA Trial HSC Examination answers. Rather the purpose is to provide teachers with information so that they can better explore, understand and apply HSC marking requirements, as established by the NSW Education Standards Authority. No guarantee or warranty is made or implied with respect to the application or use of CSSA Trial HSC Examination Marking Guidelines in relation to any specific 'Trial' HSC Examination question or answer. The CSSA assumes no liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of any Marking Guidelines provided for the CSSA Trial HSC Examination papers.